BBC - History - The Fall of the Roman Republic

The Romans treasured the antiquity of their values because, for Romans, "old" meant "good because tested by experience," but "new" meant "potentially dangerous because untested." "New things" (res novae), in fact, was the Roman expression meaning "revolution," which they feared as a source of destructive violence and social disorder. The central values that Romans believed their ancestors had established covered what we might call uprightness, faithfulness, respect ...
